Tourist Trade Revenue

It would appear that provincial governments which neglected to spend sufficient money to maintain their highways in good condition were responsible for the decline in tourist traffic from the other side of the international border. In Canada are an index of what might be expected if highways were made attractive enough to draw the quota of this windfall which the western provinces might reasonably expect.

Recently published figures show that tourists entering Canada in 1935, most of them from the United States, were responsible for a total expenditure of $262,000,000 in Canada during their stay here, if an estimate published by the Dominion department of trade and commerce can be accepted as reasonably accurate.

This is an enormous revenue from such a source when it is remembered that the principal export industry of this agricultural country totalled in value $156,153,857 in the same year, this being the value placed on Canadian exports to the United States for 1935 by the External Trade branch of the Dominion bureau of statistics.

Thus the tourist trade to Canada in 1935 was worth approximately $16,000,000 more to the country than the principal exported agricultural commodity and, when it is pointed out that a substantial proportion of tourists enter Canada by air, the value of the traffic in comparison is greater than even appears on the surface.

But when one examines the comparative figures of income from tourist traffic by provinces it is immediately apparent that the share derived by the prairie provinces of this newly developed source of wealth is but a drop in the bucket when compared with the income enjoyed by some of the eastern provinces and British Columbia.

For example, figures compiled by the Saskatchewan Motor Club show that on an average expenditure basis, varied according to length of time of their visit, American tourists entering the province direct through ports of entry on the contiguous section of the international boundary line spent $625,870 in 1934, while those entering the province through the ports of entry through Manitoba and Alberta ports and spent a portion of their time in Saskatchewan, making a total of $1,474,714 as Saskatchewan's share of this new industry—if it may be called such—last year.

In other words all that Saskatchewan derived from this source of new wealth was less than one percent of the Dominion's total income from tourist traffic. Without going into further detailed figures it may be said that the tourist revenues accruing in Alberta and Manitoba for the same period were relatively commensurate.

There are certain factors responsible for British Columbia and some of the eastern provinces, and particularly Ontario and Quebec, securing relatively more of the tourist trade than the prairie provinces. This is the principal reason. Another is the greater proportion of paved roads on the Canadian side in these provinces directly linked with similar highways in the United States.

But even after allowing for the greater advantages enjoyed by those provinces mentioned, the fact still remains that the prairie provinces are not getting anything like their proper share of tourist traffic and that for them there are great potentialities yet undeveloped.

The relative scarcity of American tourists in the prairie provinces is partly a heritage of the comparatively recent days when prairie roads have been materially improved since that time but the stigma earned by prairie roads in those days has by no means been lived down yet. This coupled with the difficulty of financing maintenance of a great mileage of gravelled highways during the still more recent depression years has had the effect of keeping away the tourist trade, good many who would otherwise travel.

This is a handicap which has to be overcome before the prairie provinces can expect to share in full measure the dividends of tourist traffic to which their natural advantages amply befit them. This can only be done by taking the necessary steps to see that the network of highways already built is maintained in good condition and that as far as possible the dust nuisance of the gravelled highways is eliminated or at least mitigated to a minimum coupled with judicious advertising.

Mustapha Kemal, president of the Turkish Republic, since 1923, has had eight attempts on his life. He pays a servant $3,000 a year for a worker to work 30 minutes a day to taste his food before he eats it. In case of his being poisoned, Kemal, known as "Grey Wolf," has made Turkey a modern State. The Turkish army discarded the fez at his command, and he has altered women's veils, the Turkish custom, and has had women wear derivatives. He has separated Church and State, established art schools where students work from living models. In Ankara, the capital, there are 100,000 students. Major General Kemal, former commanding and a tycoon, he encourages the young folk in employing themselves. He is 56 years of age, the son of a minor official, and was educated at the Military College, Turkey.

Toc H Movement

Celebrated Its Coming Of Age At Ceremony In London

Toc H, a movement which began in a dugout in Poperinge, on the Ypres road, in 1915, celebrated on Sunday, June 28, its coming-of-age in the Crystal Palace, London.

In the original ceremony of "lighting of lamps," the Duke of Kent traced the development of the movement through the empire from his humble beginning to the present and remarked that Canada now has 38 Toc H units and two houses, South Africa 57 units and one house, and Australia 140 units and one house.

He gave a message from the movement to bankers, friends and congratulations and recalling that from the earliest years of the movement he had presided practically every year at the lighting of the lamps of maintenance.

The members of the Toc H movement are to "perpetuate the lessons of cheerful self-sacrifice and mutual help, without barriers of class or creed, taught by the young men who labored in the trenches during the War." The symbol of the lamp represents the keeping alive of "the ideals which they embodied."

Referring to the recent visit of Tubby Clayton, Rev. P. B. Clayton, general secretary of the eastern Mediterranean, the duke said it had stimulated Toc H in that part of the world, where many of its members are drawn from the army, navy and air force.

Government Extends Charter Of The BBC For Ten Years

Following the recommendations of a special committee on broadcasting, it was announced in London that the government would extend the charter of the British Broadcasting Corporation for 10 years from Dec. 31 next, increase the number of governors from seven to 10 and increase the corporation's share of revenue from 10 to 12 percent.

Cost of such licences will remain at 12 shillings.

The government held the view the corporation should continue to retransmit from commercial stations, current affairs, both in broadcasts and written, and other publications.

It approved the suggestion of the committee—which submitted its report last March—that empire broadcasting stations should also held the right of licensing of relay stations should be continued for another three years, the postmaster-general being empowered to take over the relays afterward.

The government also approved a continued extension of advertisements and believed the responsible departments should take all possible steps to prevent the broadcasting of foreign advertising programs. It rejected the proposal of the broadcasting committee which was headed by Lord Illawarr, that the cultural side of broadcasting should be transferred to a cabinet minister.

Plan Erection Of Network Of Machine Gun Nests Along Border

A plan for a series of machine gun nests along the Belgian frontier and elsewhere in the territories of the empire, including the frontier states, France, Italy, the two independent states, Signor Redivo and Signor Finzi of Italy and Herr Fuechner of Austria, a bomb kills fire.

The demonstration was arranged in connection with the visit of the First Brigade, which built some 2000 sconce houses and set them alight. They also lit petrol and rubber. The new bombs killed all these fires, and aroused great enthusiasm.

The Belgian frontier bombs are like blowing out a candle on a vast scale: the force of the explosion puts out the fire. The chemical substance they contain is quite harmless, it possesses the property of setting the material it touches and so prevents the debris from smouldering afterwards. The effect of these bombs on blasting petrol in the open air was amazing.

Violent Deaths

Automobile Accidents, Suicides And Other Mishaps Toll

Automobiles and other accidents, suicides and homicides brought death to 6,885 persons in Canada last year, according to figures recently reported. Almost all forms of violent death except suicide showed increases over 1934 and crept up toward record high levels registered around 1930 and 1931.

Automobile mishaps took 1,224 lives or 11.2 per 100,000 of population compared with 1,115 in 1934. This was the largest toll since 1931 when 1,310 fatalities occurred.

In 1935, persons per 100,000, most from traffic, suffered violent death in 1935. This, too, was the highest total since 1931 and compared with 6,469 in 1934.

Suicides accounted for 902 deaths, in 1935, 921 in 1934, and homicides for 125 in 1934.

All provinces with the exception of Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Newfoundland reported a larger number of motor vehicle deaths in 1935 than in the preceding year.

Prince Edward Island, however, had two deaths as compared with five, New Brunswick 42 against 52, and Newfoundland 12.

Prince Edward Island had the lowest rate, 2.2 per 100,000, and Saskatchewan stood next with a rate of 4.1.

He said further:

Only 27 Out Of 100 In Group Are Inhabited

The Shetland group consists of 100 islands, 27 of which are inhabited. The largest are: Mainland, Yell, Unst, Fetlar, Bressay and Whalsay. The islands seldom rise to more than 500 feet above sea level. Most of the soil is peat, and barely one-sixth is under cultivation. Cattle and sheep are grazed and the small, stony Shetland ponies and Shetland sheep are well known. Fishing is of great importance, and the whale industry is of importance. Originally settled by Norsemen, the island remained under Norse rule until the marriage of James III of Scotland to Margaret, princess of Norway.

Because there's so much salt in Utah's Great Salt Lake, you can't swim in it, and it's even salinizing yourself in it. But even then his body would roll on the surface.

FLEMING'S
FOLLY

BY

His bullet rippled and wrapt from the gun barrel with a sharp crack. Roper tried frantically to regain it. His bellow was that of a maddened animal as nerves sprayed pain over his arm and shoulder. Suddenly he snatched the gun, stooped, snatched a fresh Colt from the holster. He had not touched, and gripping it, ran closer.

Link waited. A bullet had torn a hole in his trouser leg and he perhaps had already lost a good deal of blood only of those holes, pain from his side and shoulder. As the rancher fired again, Link fired. His accuracy repeated; once more Roper Kilo was disarmed.

The cowboys drew a long-drawn gasp, for all the mass came with heightening wolfish fury. The thirty feet that had separated Mell and Fleming now were entirely gone. Kilo's gun was framed in the eye of the sun and his pale, like-study hands shot for Link's wrist and throat.

They crashed a swirling mass of writhing humanity. A cloud of dust rose so that no spectators could not distinguish one from the other. Link's forty fingers exploded in a mad, blinding mad fit made it scatter away in the dust. His antagonist whipped up a knee that grazed his groin. At the same time he abandoned his wrist and locked terrorized veins like fingers on Link's throat.

His eye stared from their sockets. His head went foggy and the world seemed, then seemed to blot out. A ringing set up in his ears and the mind went with it.

Hardly before his vision came again the bulldog jaw of Roper Kilo. And with a supreme mobilization of strength in which he knew was his final effort he bit. When he bit his right arm back, crooking the elbow, then shot forth a terrific alam to the chin.

The shock, skeletal consciousness before he sagged away. Daily Fleming heard knuckles meeting jawbone, felt that awful grip on his windpipe relax, felt black-rimmed fingernails scratching at over his flesh. He crumpled to the ground as he slid into the yawning gulf of unconsciousness.

When again he opened his eyes they were stinging and heavy. The first faint smile made out was that of Helen Hamilton. She had leaned over him, held his head out of the dust with a slender arm about his neck. Gratefully he gaped from a flat bottle she held to his lips, then sank back again.

There was a movement in the circle of bystanders and Sheriff Ames Stephen's grim face appeared. The lawman knelt. "You gonna be all right?" he said. "Say, Link, I got news you're a tough guy, can you stand a terrible shot?"

Raw whisky was bringing his senses again under control and he stirred as if to rise. "The money he crooked?" "I ain't kin' to you," he said. "I got more of the cheap mustard for my money!"

his shiny head, raced up on a diminutive mounting. He leaned hard on the reins and a bit hurtled from the saddle as the animal skidded on lowering haunches. He cupped his hands to them.

"Link! By Gawd, it works! Say, give you a hundred an acre, spot cash, you hundred sucks, you Helen. Eh? We'll sign up right here!"

Fleming looked at her. They seemed to be the last. Otto, he called back to the banker, was jerking his head from them to the fascination of the valley below, and back again. "But we'll keep our promise about the fifty acres for you."

"Hundred and twenty-five dollars, then? Hundred an acre? Thirty-five? I'll buy it all! Eh? No? Look here, Link, I backed you, didn't I? Be it ever so high, didn't I? Give a hundred an acre 'fifty an acre for any amount?" the Rawhite banker cried in desperation.

"Otto, I'll give you a tammin' if you want to buy it, but that maddened me and mosey out, you sight—proton! Can't you see?" Link complained, as he maneuvered to circle Helen Hamilton's shoulders with his good right arm. "Can't you see I'm busy now?"

"What? You..."

Slowly he thrust away the check book he had produced. A disgusted expression crossed his face. Otto stepped up to his reins, clucked his mouth, and started reluctantly away.

Fifty yards distant he succumbed to a violent urge to glance around. But the banker jerked quickly from his mount, and his eyes were on one of his horses.

"Fifty! She gone!"

Link sat up with such suddenness that his forehead brushed the lawman's shoulder.

"In a shah he was on his feet. His shoulder, he noticed, was tightly bandaged. "What you say?" he cried in a voice that cracked to weird notes. "You notice? What'd you say about the dam? Fleming's Folly? She gone!"

Fleming's Folly. Huh? The End.

State Pension Plan

"Big Family" Law Has Been Intro-

"All families in the Soviet union with more than six children, the youngest of which is under five, begin immediately to receive state pension. A "big family" law is this effect and it is intended to be applied to divorced persons who have to pay up to 50 per cent. of their income for the support of their children, and divorcees will be made more difficult by this law."

Many fathers, it was announced, who for years have refused to support their children, began making payments, fearing the punishment of two years' imprisonment for non-observance of the obligation.

There were women champions! Now, and again his look turned front, his eyes squinted and hopeful at the thought of the bright Greek dawn as it flashed rapidly closer.

Fleming had one good hand with which to cling to the iron brace beside his seat. With glowing eyes he stared at the girl beside him. The girl beside him, still more sickly, still more pale, still more like a petrified Roman of Roman day.

On a hilly eminence he ventured to touch her smooth bronzed arm. Helen glanced over, braced herself, turned slowly, deftly drew her telephone.
